

ABSTRACT

A device is provided for balanced high speed submarine gel electrophoresis. In the device, a conductive balancing liquid is introduced over gel matrix to generate heat, a thickened cooler bottom slows down heat absorption, which results in quick temperature elevation to 33 °C. The elevated temperature around 33°C is utilized to accelerate gel speed and to minimize vertical temperature gradient of the gel matrix.